The Shifting Landscape of Modern Memories:

Industrial Heritage Sites, Old and New

Professor Andrew Gordon is studying the public history of industrial heritage, beginning with the UNESCO-inscribed World Heritage Sites of Japan's industrial revolution. He is also interested in sites of industrial heritage which have not been (and probably will not be) nominated to UNESCO. His talk will focus on two such sites. One is old and famous: the Ashio Copper Mine and Refinery. Another is Japan's newest "industrial heritage site": the Fukushima Dai-ichi Nuclear Power Plant.
